

The first body paragraph is the only kind of text on this page that a translator should ever see. Everything around it belongs to a policy zone.

The second body paragraph is likewise ordinary prose. Between them the page carries a running head, a folio, a reference entry and a seal.

[1] Smith et al. Layout preservation in machine translation. 2024.

